Solar thermal systems

A well made solar thermal collector can have an efficiency of up to 80 percent, making solar thermal a very efficient way to harness the sun's energy.

Under favourable sunny conditions, there is enough solar energy available to cover your complete water heating needs. A supplemental water heater is used for times when solar energy is not sufficiently available.

Typically 50 percent of the annual hot water needs of a household can be met with solar energy and a well built system will have a life span of 25 to 40 years. The solar collectors heat up a water-glycol mixture inside the collectors. This frost-protected fluid circulates via piping through a heat exchanger inside a water storage tank, where the heat energy is transferred into the potable water inside the tank.

Now solar-heated hot water is available for domestic hot water usage, process heat or any other heat energy needs.
